Our New Northwestern Territory.

The people of Oregon and Washington Territory have become Southern by the nullification of the last treaty with Russia, and our Government all that section of the continent known as Russia America. That portion of our country which we have been accustomed to speak of as "the great Northwest," is the great Northwest no longer. Stopping at the end of 49 degrees north latitude, its relative position upon the Pacific coast will hereafter be central. We have added a very extensive coast line north of which would have been continuous had the Falk administration adhered to the original programme of "44 deg. 40 min. or fight." As it is, we quit the Pacific at 49 deg. and resume again at 54 deg. 40 min., the intermediate space being filled by British possessions. Our people have faith in the manifest destiny of the nation. They look to the eventual absorption of the whole North American continent, and the Senate has undoubtedly gratified a national instinct by ratifying the treaty for the cession by Russia of her American possessions to the United States.

History.

The great tongueless Rialto appeared as Queen Elizabeth last Friday evening, before a crowded house at Farrar Hall, Erie. A numerous party went from this city to see this wonderful historic genius in one of her favorite characters. Of course, an American audience loses much of the effect of the piece, when delivered in a foreign language. The French and the Italians express a great deal by look and gesture, but we Anglo-Saxons are uncommunicative, and rely upon words as the symbols and signs of our ideas and feelings. And so, however familiar with the incidents, the personages and the catastrophe of the play, we feel admiration rather than sympathy. But the passions are universal, and never were love and pride delineated with more fidelity to nature than by Rialto, in the part of the Queen. Rialto has every element of person for masterly dramatic delineation, and for all the soft or heavily currents of the world: height of stature, and dignity, combined with grace of carriage, a voice sweet and sonorous, a countenance like the Madonna in repose, but capable of the most various expression, and an eye full of tenderness or fire, as will.

But Rialto must be seen to be appreciated, and no description can do her justice. She was not well supported. Her husband, as Barthelemy, was only mediocre, Essex was too coarse for a courtier, while Bacon was too juvenile to represent one who was nearly forty before he began to climb the rounds of political promotion.

But Rialto redeemed the faults of all her minor court. Her wardrobe and jewels were splendid, then her historical pretense over and the exhibition of her crimes as a ruler and weakness as a woman were such as only genius could achieve by the exertion of the most marvelous art.

Pennsylvania's Railroads.

We have received the Annual Report of the Auditor General of the State of Pennsylvania, showing the tabulations and deductions from the years 1866 and 1867. This work shows the value and importance of the railroads to the State. There are seventy roads in the State operated by steam, and twenty-six by horse, and fourteen canals in operation. Pennsylvania has more railroads than any other State.

The cost of the steam roads of the State is $268,684,400, and the gross receipts are set down at $70,000,790. Since the commencement of the railway system they have become one of the most valuable elements of wealth, and quite equal the entire product of the manufacturing and other industries of the State.

The length of the main branch roads is estimated at 4,437 miles, or enough to reach across the State from east to west a dozen times. It is more than the distance across the continent, and double the length of the projected lines that will connect Missouri with the Pacific.

In 1860 the railroads of the State were reported to be 929 miles, in 1866 2,542 miles, and during the last seven years there have been constructed 1,300 additional miles.

The number of passengers carried by steam is reported at 17,764,215. The number of tons of freight transported is 450,027,008. The number of passengers carried by the horse cars is 37,401,901.

On the steam railways there have been a number of accidents. Thirteen passengers and one hundred and fifty-one employees and one hundred and sixty other persons have been killed. There have been nine persons killed on the horse roads.

The report is very comprehensive, and embodies everything of interest directly relating to the general subject. It is neatly printed and substantially bound, and exceedingly valuable as a book of reference.

Our New Northwestern Territory.

The people of Oregon and Washington Territory have become Southern by the nullification of the last treaty with Russia, and our Government all that section of the continent known as Russia America. That portion of our country which we have been accustomed to speak of as "the great Northwest," is the great Northwest no longer. Stopping at the end of 49 degrees north latitude, its relative position upon the Pacific coast will hereafter be central. We have added a very extensive coast line north of which would have been continuous had the Falk administration adhered to the original programme of "44 deg. 40 min. or fight." As it is, we quit the Pacific at 49 deg. and resume again at 54 deg. 40 min., the intermediate space being filled by British possessions. Our people have faith in the manifest destiny of the nation. They look to the eventual absorption of the whole North American continent, and the Senate has undoubtedly gratified a national instinct by ratifying the treaty for the cession by Russia of her American possessions to the United States.

History.

The great tongueless Rialto appeared as Queen Elizabeth last Friday evening, before a crowded house at Farrar Hall, Erie. A numerous party went from this city to see this wonderful historic genius in one of her favorite characters. Of course, an American audience loses much of the effect of the piece, when delivered in a foreign language. The French and the Italians express a great deal by look and gesture, but we Anglo-Saxons are uncommunicative, and rely upon words as the symbols and signs of our ideas and feelings. And so, however familiar with the incidents, the personages and the catastrophe of the play, we feel admiration rather than sympathy. But the passions are universal, and never were love and pride delineated with more fidelity to nature than by Rialto, in the part of the Queen. Rialto has every element of person for masterly dramatic delineation, and for all the soft or heavily currents of the world: height of stature, and dignity, combined with grace of carriage, a voice sweet and sonorous, a countenance like the Madonna in repose, but capable of the most various expression, and an eye full of tenderness or fire, as will.

But Rialto must be seen to be appreciated, and no description can do her justice. She was not well supported. Her husband, as Barthelemy, was only mediocre, Essex was too coarse for a courtier, while Bacon was too juvenile to represent one who was nearly forty before he began to climb the rounds of political promotion.

But Rialto redeemed the faults of all her minor court. Her wardrobe and jewels were splendid, then her historical pretense over and the exhibition of her crimes as a ruler and weakness as a woman were such as only genius could achieve by the exertion of the most marvelous art.

Pennsylvania's Railroads.

We have received the Annual Report of the Auditor General of the State of Pennsylvania, showing the tabulations and deductions from the years 1866 and 1867. This work shows the value and importance of the railroads to the State. There are seventy roads in the State operated by steam, and twenty-six by horse, and fourteen canals in operation. Pennsylvania has more railroads than any other State.

The cost of the steam roads of the State is $268,684,400, and the gross receipts are set down at $70,000,790. Since the commencement of the railway system they have become one of the most valuable elements of wealth, and quite equal the entire product of the manufacturing and other industries of the State.

The length of the main branch roads is estimated at 4,437 miles, or enough to reach across the State from east to west a dozen times. It is more than the distance across the continent, and double the length of the projected lines that will connect Missouri with the Pacific.

In 1860 the railroads of the State were reported to be 929 miles, in 1866 2,542 miles, and during the last seven years there have been constructed 1,300 additional miles.

The number of passengers carried by steam is reported at 17,764,215. The number of tons of freight transported is 450,027,008. The number of passengers carried by the horse cars is 37,401,901.

On the steam railways there have been a number of accidents. Thirteen passengers and one hundred and fifty-one employees and one hundred and sixty other persons have been killed. There have been nine persons killed on the horse roads.

The report is very comprehensive, and embodies everything of interest directly relating to the general subject. It is neatly printed and substantially bound, and exceedingly valuable as a book of reference.
